

It's time to put your money back to work

Amid volatility, keep your eye on your long-term goals

Like many investors, you're likely concerned about the impact of the coronavirus on the markets and on the value of your portfolio. From an all-time high of 3,386 on February 19, 2020, the S&P 500® Index closed down 20% for the first quarter of 2020.

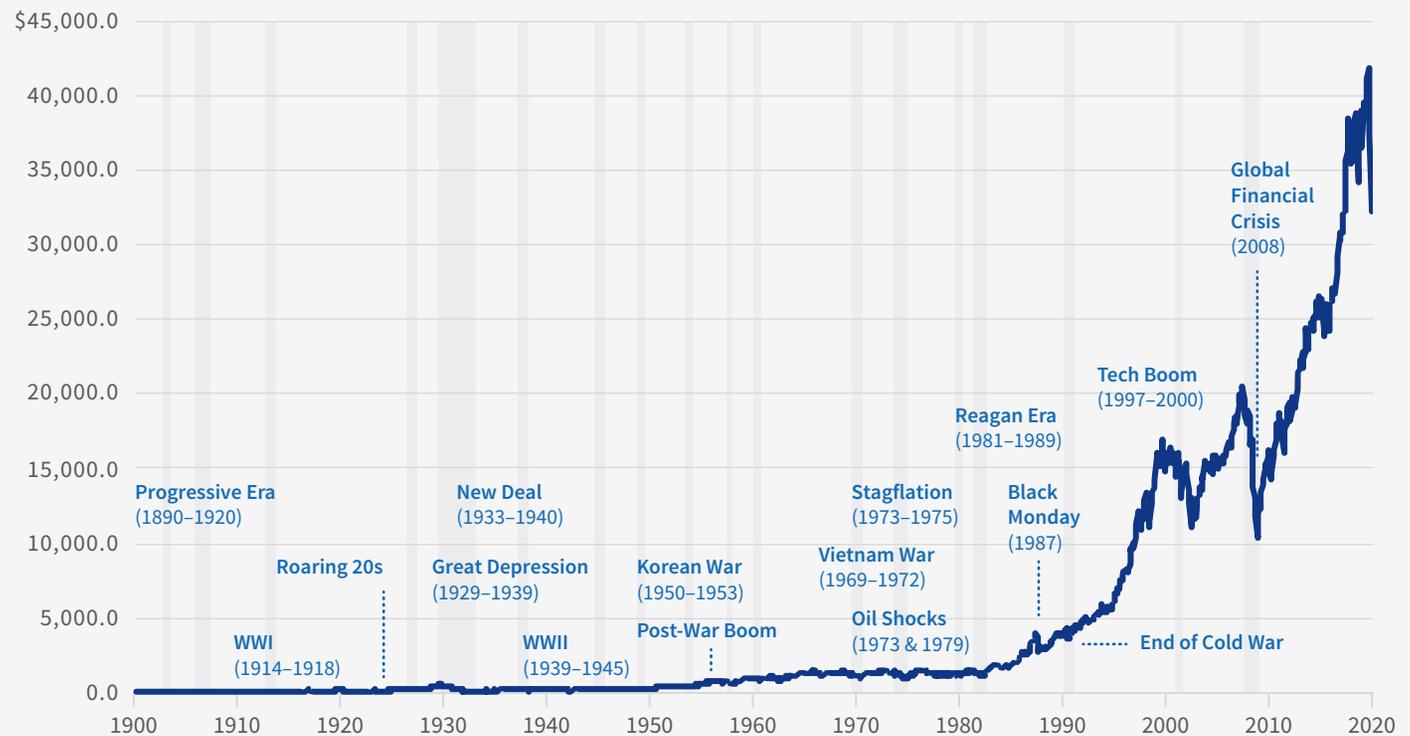

If the downturn has tempted you to stay on the sidelines, or perhaps reallocate abruptly, review your portfolio to make sure it aligns with your long-term financial goals.

This doesn't mean rushing things. But with the market showing signs of recovery, this may be an appropriate time to map a thoughtful course of action to help maximize your investments.

Remember: Every major downturn, including the Great Depression and the 2008 Global Financial Crisis, has been followed by periods of progress and growth. While the past cannot predict the future, equities have a long history of resiliency.
